the building to catch a glimuse of her, but appeared to court the notoriety she has gained for herself.

Many reels of red tape had to be undergone before she could be arraigned in court. She was first placed in the Detective Hureau connected with the District-Attorney's office. Then she was escorted upstairs, down again to the District-Attorney's office and finally into Part I, of the General Sessions.

She was dressed in a blue Eton suit, which was somewhat awry, wore a small straw hat and had on a pair of gold-rimmed eyeglasses, she walked back and forth with a swinging gait and acted as though the matter was of little consequence.

Several Attarchists were in the corridor of the building as early as 9.50 o'clock. Among them were dustus Schwab and Otto Peukert. The former, it is said, will offer himself as bery bondsman later in the day.

From the time she was brought into the building until her arraignment in court she was in a small private room with Jacobs and Krauch, Jacobs carried a bindle of legal documents. The three carried on an animated conversation and Miss Goldman often could be heard talking in a boul tone.

At ILEs she was taken into Part 1, of the General Sessions. A sea was given a steam of the count in a brazen manner.
